OHG. is the only one of the older languages in which a fully developed adjectival use of the word exists along with the adverbial. In OE. there are very scanty traces of adjectival inflexion, néah being commonly employed either as a simple adv. or with a dependent dative: in predicative use it may sometimes be taken as an adjective, but it is more probable that in such cases also it is an adverb. It is not till the 14th or 15th cent. that the attributive use becomes common.

The original comparative of néah as an adv. is nêar, nêor, NEAR adv.[1], while the adj. form nêarra finally became ner, NAR a. The OE. superlative níehst(a is latterly represented by NEXT a. and adv. After phonetic changes had obscured the relationship of these forms to the positive, a new compar. and superl., nigher and nighest, were formed, and have been in common use since the 16th cent.]

‖ Nisi prius (nəi·səi prəi·ŏs). Law. Also 8 nisi prise. [L. nisi prius, unless previously. The significance of the phrase is thus explained by Blackstone, Comm. (1768) III. 59:

'All causes commenced in the courts of Westminster-hall are by the course of the courts appointed to be there tried, on a day fixed in some Easter or Michaelmas term, by a jury returned from the county, wherein the cause of action arises; but with this proviso, nisi prius justitiarii ad assisas capiendas venerint; unless before the day prefixed the judges of assise come into the county in question.'

In the second statute of Westminster (1285) § 30, by which the system was instituted, only the word nisi is used. The following is an early example of the full phrase:—

1297 Coram Regis Roll m. 3 dorso (1898) 30 Ideo Vicecomes habeat corpora omnium coram Rege ad prefatum terminum &c. Nisi prius R. le Brabanzon vel G. de Roubyr' vel eorum alter si prius ad partes illas &c.]

Non, obs. form of NONE, NOON, NUN.

Non- (nɒn), prefix (also 4–6 noun-, noon-, 5 nom-, 5–6 nowne-, 5–7 none-, often written separate), used to express negation. The earlier formations were either directly adopted from, or modelled upon, Anglo-French compounds in noun- = OF. non-, nom-, nun-, num- (mod.F. non-) :—L. non 'not' used as a prefix; from about 1500 the predominant form of the prefix is that of the L. nōn. It appears first in English towards the end of the 14th c. in non-power (Chaucer, Langland, Wyclif), and non-residence, nonsuit (Wyclif). In the 15th and 16th c. a considerable number of compounds (chiefly nouns of action and gerunds) were in use, most of them being of a legal character. Until about the middle of the 17th c. the compounds formed with non- are mostly of a special or technical kind, but from that time the prefix became less restricted in its use and began to be prefixed freely to substantives, adjectives and adverbs, participles, and verbal sbs. (rarely to infinitival forms). To the political and religious movements of the 17th and 18th c. are due many new formations, some of which, as nonconformist, non-juror, non-resistance, have a permanent place in the language.

In the majority of the compounds of non- the hyphen is usually retained; but it is commonly omitted in the case of a few, such as nonconformist, nonentity, nonsense, in which the etymology has been to some extent lost sight of. Normally the prefix is unstressed, but in the disyllables nonage, nonclaim, nonsense, nonsuit, and in nonchalance, -ant, nondescript, the non- receives the stress. It is also liable to be stressed when the compound and the simple word are coupled together, as to act or non-act, distribution or non-distribution, being and non-being.

Formations having an independent status or a continuous history during any period are entered as Main words; a small proportion of the remainder are illustrated in this article, no attempt having been made to represent with any degree of fullness the very extensive development in the use of the prefix during the last hundred years.

N

By W. A. CRAIGIE
M.A., LL.D.

PREFACE TO THE LETTER N.

THIS concluding portion of Volume VI, containing the words which begin with N, includes 3484 Main words, 440 Special Combinations explained under these, 2298 Subordinate entries, and 1570 Obvious Combinations; in all 7792 words. Of the Main words, 1079 are marked † as obsolete, and 147 are marked ‖ as alien or not fully naturalized.*

N is one of the smaller letters in respect of the number of words beginning with it, and occupies only about half the space of L, and one-third that of M. Although including a considerable number of words in very common use, it does not comprise any which require very extensive treatment; the longer articles rarely exceed four or five columns, and a large number are comparatively short. In most cases the words have a very definite sense or senses, so that difficulties of arrangement or definition are few. On the etymological side, also, N is not a difficult letter; the great majority of the words being either native English, with clear cognates in the other Teutonic tongues, or Latin, adopted directly or through French. Those to which more or less obscurity attaches are chiefly short words of a colloquial type, as nag (horse), nap (to seize), nape, nasty, natty, nib, nibble, nick, nip, nipple, nob, nobble, nod, noddle, noddy, nog, noggin, noodle, nugget, etc. The origin of words of this class is very often obscure, and the absence of similar forms in the cognate languages makes it probable that they are mainly of native origin, though their history cannot be clearly traced.

The number of native words in N is considerably increased by the coalescence of the OE. negative ne with the following word. Hence the forms naught, neither, never (ne'er), no, none, nor, not, nothing, nought, and the dialect or obsolete na, nat, nather, nauther, nother, nouther. (The distinction in form between naught and nought goes back to OE., and has not hitherto been clearly exhibited.) Formerly also this ne was prefixed to certain verbs, of which the only surviving representative is nill; illustrations of the others are given under nabbe, nad, nave; nam, nas, nis, nys; nist, not(e, etc.

Another addition to the words beginning with N is made by the cases in which the final letter of an or more rarely then (dative) has been transferred to the following word. In ME. this might occur with any word beginning with a vowel (see N 3), but the tendency towards the transference was more persistent in some cases than in others, as exemplified by nall, naul (awl), nain, nown (own), naunt and nuncle; in nickname and nonce the wrong division has become permanent.

Although no original prefix, either English or Latin, begins with N, the place of one has been taken by the Latin non, first introduced in a few Anglo-French words, and gradually extended in use until its application is practically unlimited. In this respect it resembles the real prefixes re- and un-, the full illustration of which in any dictionary is impossible.

The material originally collected for the letter N was subedited by various hands, viz. Na- and Nicher—Niggot by the Rev. A. P. Fayers, Yeadon, Leeds; Ne- by Mr. A. Hailstone, Manchester; Ni- to Nichel by Prof. F. E. Bumby, Nottingham; Nigh—Nizy by Mr. H. A. Nesbit, Hampstead; No—Nonyl by Mrs. G. H. Pope, Clifton (now Oxford); Noodle—Nozzle by Mr. E. L. Brandreth, London; and Nu- to the end of the letter by Mr. R. F. Green, Liverpool. Since this work was done, much fresh material had accumulated, often of great value in helping toward the real history of the various words.

Among those to whom acknowledgements are due for assistance in dealing with special words are Prof. I. Bywater of Oxford; Prof. W. W. Skeat of Cambridge; Mr. James Platt, Jr., who has supplied definite information regarding words from various American, African, and Asiatic languages; Dr. Alex. M'Kenzie, who specially revised the chemical terms connected with nitre; Dr. D. Hay Fleming, Edinburgh; and Mr. J. Maitland Anderson of the University Library, St. Andrews. Mr. E. L. Brandreth has helped by verification, in the British Museum Library, of references to books not accessible in Oxford.

* The following figures show how the present work compares with certain other Dictionaries:—

	Johnson.	Cassell's 'Encyclopædic'.	'Century' Dict.	Funk's 'Standard'.	Here.
Words recorded	663	3419	3622	3557	7792
Words illustrated by quotations	516	1106	1261	373	6693
Number of quotations	1746	1712	3362	511	36859

The number of quotations in this portion of Richardson's Dictionary is 1431.

The proofs have been regularly read by Lord Aldenham, Dr. A. Caland, of Wageningen, Holland (who has done great service in verifying references and in other respects), Mr. H. Chichester Hart (who has supplied many quotations from Elizabethan literature), the Rev. J. A. Milne, of Lyne, Peeblesshire, and latterly by the Rev. Canon Fowler, of Durham.

Those who have more immediately assisted in the preparation of N have been Mr. J. M. Ramsay, M.A. (in the earlier part), Mr. L. F. Powell, Miss E. R. Steane, Mr. R. F. Ray, Mr. J. H. Smithwhite, B.A., and (since the beginning of the present year) Mr. G. Watson. The article on NON-, and all the words beginning with this prefix, together with NONCE, were independently prepared by Mr. C. T. Onions, M.A.
